If you want to write a chemical equation, start by writing the chemical formulas of each reactant. Use the prefixes, such as mono-, di-, tri-, and tetra-, to figure out the number of atoms present for each element, and write this number as a subscript for each element. For example, dihydrogen monoxide would be more easily written as H₂O.

The pattern between electrostatic force and distance can be further characterized as an inverse square relationship. Careful observations show that the electrostatic force between two point charges varies inversely with the square of the distance of separation between the two charges. That is, the factor by which the electrostatic force is changed is the inverse of the square of the factor by ...
