Design elements have an impact on how a piece of work is perceived, executed, and used—and are present in design regardless of skill, taste, or style. In his book, Art As Experience, American philosopher and psychologist John Dewey concluded that everything artists and designers create has massive implications on people's everyday experiences.

Often times our own unique homes can be a mix of styles that we love – such is the case in my house. I like to define my style as a mix between a Farmhouse in France and a Cottage on the Coast, but sum it up as “Cottage Romance”.. As I've studied and been inspired by French style for years, I too have found there are common elements of design for that charming look.
