In a recent post we outlined our four step minimum risk procurement strategy in which we discussed the creation of an evaluation framework. This is something that I cannot stress the importance of enough — not only is a good evaluation framework the only way to accurately measure the relative merits (or otherwise) of submitted tenders, it is a necessity for

The definition of a company's assets has changed over the years. It has moved from physical buildings to virtual assets like intellectual property. But, few companies realize how important their data is. Increased sharing of company data necessitates companies to develop solid framework of regulations to regulate how data is handled, managed, and processed. This requires the input of all ...
