The Third Man (1949) is a visually-stylish thriller - a paranoid story of social, economic, and moral corruption in a depressed, rotting and crumbling, 20th century Vienna following World War II. The striking film-noirish, shadowy thriller was filmed expressionistically within the decadent, shattered and poisoned city that has been sector-divided along geo-political lines.

The priest pays Kino and Juana a visit, and he reminds Kino to give thanks for the pearl. But the music of the Song of Evil and the music of the Song of the Enemy almost drown out the priest's words because he quotes things from the books that Kino cannot know until Coyotito learns to read. Next, the doctor and his servant arrive.
