Certainly he was a charming man. To make it even more charming he traveled with this poodle, Charley. Steinbeck didn't give out his name, didn't want to be treated as the big writer. Thus he gathered a very honest, undistorted view of 1960 America. I also didn't know Steinbeck didn't live very long. He died in 1968 at the age of 66.

The park is earnest and utilitarian; it doesn't need to be anything else but a user-friendly park with a retractable roof. According to Pete Freedman, founder and publisher of the Dallas culture website Central Track, a portion of the Rangers fan base misses Globe Life Park, but not the steamy days and nights that came with it.
